UK Outlook for Monday 22 Mar 2021 to Wednesday 31 Mar 2021:
High pressure is likely to remain dominant for many through this period, bringing settled, mainly dry conditions and light winds. Cloud cover will be varied, with sunny spells at times but also the chance of some drizzle or light showers. There is a continued risk of frosts and localised fog patches on clear nights. However, unsettled conditions will gradually move in from the northwest through this period. Strengthened westerly winds could bring frontal zones, rain, and thicker cloud to northern and western areas intermittently, these being interspersed with drier, brighter spells. Occasionally these conditions may reach central areas, but southeastern areas will likely stay largely dry. Temperatures are expected to be near to or milder than average, though short-lived cooler interludes could occur in the showery conditions following weather fronts.
